OVER 260 YEARS OF AMERICAN HISTORY

The Bird & Bottle Inn is situated on the ancestral lands of the Munsee Lenape - indigenous peoples who lived in the Highlands region and all along the tributaries leading to what we now call the Hudson River.

Built in 1761, The Bird is an example of the traditional Dutch Colonial style home, with a history predating the American Revolution. Known for years as Warren's Tavern, the property was an important stagecoach stop along the Old Albany Post Road in Garrison, NY and catered to those journeying between NYC & Albany.

Once the Warren family home / ancestral home of the great Emily Warren Roebling -- chief engineer and construction supervisor of the landmark Brooklyn Bridge project. A woman ahead of her time in the 1870s.

In 1940 the property opened to the public as The Bird & Bottle Inn after a complete restoration led by locals Charles & Constance Stearns. The Bird quickly established a reputation as a culinary destination and getaway for NYC's celebs and foodies. Hollywood starlets like Joan Crawford and Veronica Lake were known to hang out here. Famed African American chef Lena Richard is the Bird & Bottle Inn's very first Executive Chef, taking the helm in 1940 and bringing her unique Louisiana Creole flavors to the New York set. A woman ahead of her time, Lena was a celebrity chef who smashed barriers in the Jim Crow south with her own business, published cookbook, and television show. Lena Richard's recipes put the Bird & Bottle Inn on the map and her Creole influence remained here through at least the late 1950s.

Around the time Lena Richard left The Bird, an up-and-coming NYC caterer was brought in as a consultant. It was none other than James Beard.

PRESENT DAY: local Hudson Valleyites Marjorie Tarter and Brendan McAlpine purchased and restored The Bird & Bottle, reopening its doors to the public in April of 2022 to continue the longstanding history of wonderful hospitality & culinary delights.
